The Oakland Police Department Stop Human Trafficking

The United States is a top destination for sex trafficking, and the crime happens here in Oakland. The Oakland Police Department wants to help people who are being trafficked. We rescue the victims, arrest the traffickers, team up with advocacy groups so that victims can get help and partner with the Alameda County District Attorney's Office to hold traffickers accountable.

You may be a victim if.....

The Department of Justice defines human trafficking as exploiting a person through forced labor, trafficking with respect to peonage (forcing someone to work to pay off debt), slavery, or involuntary servitude, and sex trafficking of children or of others by force, fraud, or coercion.

You may be a victim of human trafficking if someone has:

- Forced you to work against your will.
- Collected a debt by using threats or forcing you to work to pay the debt.
- Forced you to work using threats to harm you and/or your family.
- Forced or pressured you into prostitution or to do other sexual acts.
- Taken away your passport, birth certificate, or identification card to intimidate and control your movements.

Help is Available

Victims of human trafficking may need a variety of services. Getting connected to resources such as stable housing or medical services can help you cope. Talk to [Agency] Victim Services for information on federal, state, and local resources available to you.

Benefits of Counseling

When it is safe to do so, consider speaking to a counselor. Some benefits to seeking counseling:

- Coping skills and strategies can help you to continue daily activities and relationships.
- Establishing a support network can help to decrease the negative physical, psychological, and emotional effects that often result from traumatic experiences.
- In a confidential setting, you can discuss topics such as:
 - Safety planning and options for the future.
 - The event and how it made you feel.
 - Legal and judicial decisions.
